Weekly Feedback Report	CONTACT ADDRESS: ltu@mediasupport.org	Date of Issue 1 June 2020

Brief Summary

The main concerns expressed by Radio Ergo callers during the past week (calls between 19-25 May 2020) are the devastation being caused to farms and grazing land by locusts; the spread of Coronavirus within the country; displacement and losses caused by Shabelle river floods; and hardships facing IDPs in various locations. As this period coincided with the last week of Ramadan, we also received large numbers of Eid greetings from listeners, which are not included here. The following summarises the main thematic content of the calls.

Locusts- dozens of callers, most notably from northern and central regions with a few from the south, reported invasions of swarms of locusts eating up crops and pasture. The biggest number of calls came from Sanag and Galgadud regions. Others came from Togdher, Sool, Bari, Nugal, as well as Lower Shabelle and Middle Juba. People described locusts covering the reservoirs, scaring the livestock, and destroying crops and produce just planted this season. Many asked for the authorities and agencies to bring the aerial spraying and control measures they have heard about to their areas. A caller in Qardho (Puntland), however, said the locusts were still alive after being sprayed by helicopter, and he questioned the efficacy of the pesticides. A caller in Lasanod (Sool) said their livestock had fallen sick after eating fodder that had been sprayed so they now feared the effects of spraying. In the Shabelle area, a caller said he did not plant last season, had just been hit by floods, and now had been hit by locusts. Callers from Janale (L. Shabelle) said their bananas, watermelons, sesame, and maize had all been wiped out. Two callers advised not to kill the locusts saying they are nutritious for animals, people, and the soil, and they augur good rains for the future. A caller in Garowe said the locusts come from god so people must pray, but they also need helicopters to come and spray. (Note: Radio Ergo is airing an ongoing series of programmes about locusts with FAO experts, providing updates on control interventions, advice, and responses to listeners' questions).

Coronavirus- we received more calls this week than the previous week about Covid19. Many of the calls seem to reflect a closer proximity to the risks and realities of the disease, as opposed to a more general curiosity that has been observed in previous weeks. Several callers reported cases of what they assume to be unconfirmed Coronavirus in their areas. Some expressed frustration over the lack of compliance with prevention measures. Some calls were related to prayers during Ramadan. A caller in Berbera talked about the argument between those advocating prayer first and others calling for social distancing. A caller in Kismayo noted that mosques have been closed yet the khat trade continues. Two female callers wanted the mosques to be reopened with worshippers wearing masks and social distancing. One of them, in Kismayo, said that going to the mosque is especially important for men. A caller in Bossaso said everyone is coughing there and it must be Coronavirus. Several callers from Galgadud (Adado, Huurshe, and Balanbale) said there are undiagnosed cases in their areas that are being confused with flu. Many callers addressed specific questions to Ergo's Radio Doctors (regular broadcast segments). These include how can rural people stay safe; should people be eating together and sharing food; where should infected people be sleeping and washing; and how can the messaging be adapted to make people change their behaviour. A caller in M. Shabelle said Coronavirus has stopped the flow of cash he relied on from relatives abroad to support his children and livestock. Callers in Sanag said they wanted the authorities to issue them with masks. A female caller in Kismayo wanted to share a poem she has written on Coronavirus.

Floods- a number of callers from Hiran, especially Beletweyn and El-Jalle, shared their experiences of having been displaced by the Shabelle river floods, and left without shelter, water, jobs, and livestock fodder. These callers were appealing for assistance.

IDPs- there were several calls from displaced former pastoralist communities in Mudug and Galgadud, calling for help with shelter, water, and malaria prevention. A community in Eldhere in Galgadud said they faced eviction from their homes again. Some dispossessed pastoralists in camps in Bari said they had been registered by agencies but the aid never came.

Livestock and Farming- this week there were calls from livestock herders about camel disease in Somaliland, with one caller suggesting it was linked to Coronavirus. Some callers reported goat diseases in Galmudug. There were many calls this week from farmers asking questions to the experts in our weekly Agriculture segment.

Water shortage – there were calls from Togdher, eastern Sanag, and Puntland complaining about water scarcity.
