

Brief Summary

Callers to Radio Ergo's independent feedback platform this week (9-13 September 2020) were concerned about locusts continuing to destroy farms and pasture in northern and central regions; growing water scarcity in parts of the north and central Somalia; the effects of river floods; and localised outbreaks of Covid19. The following summarises the voice messages received from across the country according to theme.

Locusts – the majority of the calls were from the north, in particular Sanag, Sool, and Bari, as well as from Mudug. Callers from Sanag said they had received no control measures and felt neglected. A caller from south-west of Erigavo complained that spraying measures were being delayed by politics and action was needed before the locusts destroyed everything. A number of callers from Lasanod district, notably Awr-bogey, complained of suffering locust invasions for seven months without any intervention. Callers from various parts of Puntland complained that the locusts had eaten everything that grew after recent rainfall. Several communities in Mudug also reported being invaded by locusts and wanting their voices to be heard.

Covid19 – many callers this week asked specific questions to the Radio Doctor (regular Ergo programme segment), some regarding symptoms they were experiencing themselves and suspected to be Covid19. Some reported presumed cases of Covid19 in their families or neighbourhoods. Individual cases and/or suspected local outbreaks were reported from Togdher (Buhodle and Sahil), Galgadud (Dhusamareb, Adado), M. Shabelle (Jowhar), and Gedo (Beledhawo). A caller in Sahil claimed there had been three deaths. A caller in Dhusamareb said he had just recovered from Covid19, with very unpleasant symptoms, and urged others to protect themselves from the disease. A caller in Balli-dhig, in Togdher on the Ethiopian border, said they had no water and soap to protect themselves. A caller in Galkayo, Mudug, wanted to know if the farm produce from southern regions could carry Coronavirus. A caller from an unspecified rural location asked if surfaces like doors, bedding and trees could carry the virus. In Jowhar, a caller wanted to know if groceries and money could transmit the virus. A caller in Gedo asked if a pregnant woman could transmit the virus to her unborn baby. Several callers asked how to differentiate Covid19 from ordinary flu. A caller in Hiran said they lacked access to doctors and hospitals.

Floods – callers from Hiran, M. Shabelle and Gedo complained about the destructive impact of river flooding. Most wanted help as well as long term solutions after losing homes and farms. A female caller in Beletweyn said they had been displaced by floods three times in almost a year and they feared further flooding. They were facing poor living conditions with lack of toilets and clean water. A farmer calling from Jowhar said their lives had been affected by the floods and the pandemic. A caller in Bardera said they had received some cash after being hit by floods and locusts, but the cash had stopped when they needed it most.

WASH – there was an increased number of calls reporting drought and water scarcity. These came from parts of Somaliland, Puntland, Mudug and Galgadud. Callers complained that their livestock had no water and food prices were high. Rain-fed farmers in M. Shabelle said they had no water and also needed plastic water storage containers.

Food security – pastoralist communities in Sanag (Taleh and El-adde) called for help. The former group said they were unable to migrate in search of water and livestock grazing, while the latter said they had lost their livestock previously and needed aid. Some IDPs in Bosaso called for assistance and services including health services.

Livestock – herders in Somaliland (Buhodle) wanted to know if Coronavirus was transmissible between animals and humans. A herder in Mudug complained that veterinary drugs for certain diseases were not available. Other callers had questions for the vet experts or requests for treatment for their herds.
