

Brief Summary

Locusts attacking farms and grazing land across the country were once again the subject of the biggest number of calls to Radio Ergo's independent feedback platform this week (14-20 January 2021). There were more calls in this period about water shortages, as well as concerns about the survival of livestock due to drought-like conditions caused by the voracious locusts and the lack of water. Callers also complained about the demise of the shilling in some parts. There continued to be calls to the Radio Doctor about COVID19. The following summarises the calls by theme.

Locusts – calls about locusts came from regions including Togdher, Sool, Sanag, Galmudug, Hiran, M. Shabelle, L. Shabelle, Bay, and Gedo. People described destroyed farms and vegetation and asked for help and spraying control measures. A camel herder in Sool was worried about the lack of fodder for his camels. Some displaced families also in Sool were concerned about their goats as the locusts had left no vegetation. There were similar calls from parts of Mudug and Galgadud, where livestock had no food left. In part of Galgadud people said they had been displaced because of the locusts. In Hiran, many callers complained of losing all their crops and farm produce, with locusts also falling into and contaminating the water sources. Farmers in Defow, Hiran, said they would need help from the Food and Agriculture Organisation to get back to farming after the losses. A caller in Libahle, L. Shabelle, said swarms of locusts had just arrived in their area.

Water shortage – calls about water shortages came mainly from across the north, notably Togdher and Sool, Puntland, parts of central Somalia, Hiran and M. Shabelle. In Buhodle, Togdher, communities faced lack of water and grazing, and wanted help due to the hardships. In Hudun, Sool, callers said they were facing drought, lack of water, and losses from the rejection of the Somali shilling. In Aryoley, Sool, the wells were said to be dry. Many callers spoke of drought and said they needed humanitarian aid. A caller in Idoole, Adado, appealed for help to save their livestock due to the water crisis. A caller in Adaro village in an unspecified part of south central Somalia said their livestock had water and they needed the government to dig boreholes. They were also being affected by locusts.

Cash – callers in Hiran, Puntland, Sool and Sanag complained about the hardships beings caused by the rejection of the Somali shilling. In Garowe a number of callers said prices had rocketed and they wanted the shilling back to replace the dollar. One caller said he went out with 100,000 shillings to buy food supplies but was unable to afford anything.

Coronavirus – callers from various regions had questions for the Radio Doctor, mainly asking to explain or identify symptoms that could be related to Coronavirus. Several wanted to know how to differentiate between COVID19 and flu. A caller in Sanag region said many people there were sick with a flu-like illness and they wanted mass testing and treatment campaigns.
