

Brief Summary

The most common issues raised by callers to Radio Ergo's independent feedback platform this week (28 January to 4 February 2021) were the destructive impact of locusts and increasing water shortages in parts of the country. The numbers reporting water scarcity rose compared to previous weeks. There were also many calls citing a combination of problems, notably locusts, water scarcity, livestock illness, and livelihood distress. Conflict in central Somalia was also mentioned, and there were more callers to the Radio Doctor about Coronavirus. The following summarises the calls by theme.

Locusts – this week's callers were spread across northern, central and southern regions, although Sanag, Galmudug and Gedo stood out in terms of call volume. Other calls (from identified locations) came from Awdal, Togdher, Bari, Nugal, Mudug, Hiran, M. and L. Shabelle. A caller in Qoryalle (Togdher) said they had been invaded by locusts and were also suffering water shortage. A caller in Bari said swarms of locusts were spreading rapidly across the area. Puntland callers spoke of large numbers of locusts and larvae being laid. Many callers described the destruction of crops and grazing and other vegetation, and called for assistance from government as well as humanitarian aid. Communities in Adado (Galgadud) reported new waves of locusts at the end of January/start of February. Farmers in Jowhar (M. Shabelle) said they had lost their crops and were out of work. One Jowhar farmer said the locusts arrived on 1 February and everything they had planted had been wiped out. There were several calls from Gedo. One female caller in Bardera said the locusts had destroyed their farm and their lifeline, and another female caller in Bardera appealed for intervention.

Water shortage – calls reporting water shortage were almost as numerous this week as the locust calls. The regions that produced most callers included Togdher, Sanag, Sool, Mudug, Galgadud, M. and L. Shabelle. Farmers in Wanlaweyn, Jowhar and Balad said water levels in the river Shabelle had dropped so they could not access water for their crops. Some were also affected by locusts. In the north, a female caller in Sool said they were suffering drought, they had no water wells, and there were people in the area who had been displaced. She said they were also worried about the spread of Coronavirus. Another caller in Oodla, Sool, said they had no food for their livestock. One caller said they could not buy water due to businessmen's refusal to accept the Somali shilling. Callers in central regions called for urgent aid, including people in Guriel and Adado in Galgadud, and several in Mudug including in Jariban, Galkayo, and Sahaqurun. In Sanag, callers said there was either no water or what remained was brackish and unpotable. People and livestock were being affected in Aroweyn. A female former pastoralist in Badhan said after losing their livestock to drought they had turned to farming, but lost their crops to locusts. They were now displaced, without water or food. Many Togdher callers said they were facing drought, water shortage, locusts, and livestock diseases. In Buhodle, one caller said lack of water had now surpassed the locusts as their main concern. Another in Buhodle said their camels might not survive the lack of water and disease spreading.

Livestock – there were many more callers this week from livestock communities, reporting not only livestock diseases but also general pressure on their livelihood. The callers in the north were mostly suffering from water shortage and lack of fodder. A caller in Ayn, Togdher, said livestock prices had plummeted and one animal now sold for the price of 2 kgs of rice. Agro-pastoralists in Erigabo (Sanag) had lost their crops to locusts and wanted help to save their livestock from diseases. Callers in Taleh said they were suffering drought and their livestock were sick and they never received any aid in their area. Others had questions for the veterinary experts to answer.

COVID19 – there were more calls this week on Coronavirus, with a third of them from female callers. Most were about symptoms and were addressed to the Radio Doctor for diagnosis and advice. The calls came from Togdher, Sanag, Sool, Bari, Galmudug, Banadir, Hiran, and L. Juba. One caller in Taleh (Sanag) wanted to know the difference between Coronavirus and whooping cough. Several others asked how to differentiate between Coronavirus and regular flu. A caller in Aroweyn, Widhwidh (Togdher) observed that many people had fallen sick with the cold season in the area, which the caller described as a new wave of Coronavirus.
