

Brief Summary

The major issues of concern among callers this week (12-17 February 2021) to Radio Ergo's independent audience feedback platform were drought, water and food shortage, and the harsh impact on livelihoods. There was also a large number of calls about locusts. Many of these callers raised a number of interlinked problems, including livestock in poor health and lack of support services and absence of aid. This week also showed an increase in the number of calls to the Radio Doctor asking questions about Coronavirus. The following summarises the calls by theme.

Drought/water shortage – the majority of calls came from across northern regions especially Togdher and Sanag in Somaliland and some in Puntland, with other from central and southern regions, most noticeably Gedo. Many callers asked for intervention and delivery of water and other aid by government and humanitarian organisations. Callers used the term drought in many cases. In Somaliland, a caller said they needed water wells and other water sources to be installed. In Buhodle, Togdher, a caller said no aid organisations had come to help the drought-hit families. A caller in Widhwidh said the remaining water in the well was bitter and the livestock were in limbo. A caller in Sarar said the pastoralists faced water scarcity, livestock disease and neglect. In Sanag, a caller said the little rainfall they had received had left them short of water and had attracted new waves of locusts. Another in Sanag said they had no water and the nearest hospital was 70 kilometres away. Some callers asked for more information on weather forecasts to know when the drought might end. Callers in Gedo said the wells were empty, river water levels were low, locusts had destroyed farm produce, and people and livestock were suffering from lack of water.

Locusts – the calls came from across the country in particular from Sanag, Galmudug, and Gedo. Several callers in Badhan and Balli-Jilal in Sanag complained of new waves of destructive locusts arriving in mid-February. In Hingalol, a caller said hopper bands were causing havoc. In Bari, a caller in Gargore said the locusts had destroyed livestock fodder and were eating away the acacia trees that provide shade. In Adado, callers complained of loss of grazing and sick livestock. One caller in Adado said they could no longer sell their livestock. Callers in Gedo said farms and fodder had been affected by locusts and they had not received any aerial spraying campaign. One caller in Bardera said their livelihoods had been ravaged by floods, locusts and now drought and they had received no aid.

Livestock – callers with reports of livestock disease and questions to the Radio Vet came from northern, central and southern regions. There were more livestock calls than in recent previous weeks.

COVID19 – there were more callers on this topic this week than previous, coming from all regions. Areas producing multiple callers included Togdher, Sanag, Sool, and Galmudug. There were also calls from Mogadishu, Hiran, Bay and Gedo. The majority were questions to the Radio Doctor about symptoms, especially how to diagnose flu from COVID19, how the virus spreads, how to prevent or treat the disease, and whether you can get the disease twice. Some callers noted the prevalence of sickness in their areas. Some callers noted the comeback of the virus in Somalia and the need to take precautionary measures such as wearing masks.

South Central	2/15/2021	Agriculture	Hello Radio Ergo, I would like to report drought in the area that has affected our farm produce. We were planting tomatoes and they have been infested by pests. We don't know how to get rid of the pests and we would like the experts to tell us if we should plant other produce as the tomatoes are failing.
