

Brief Summary

This week (25 February-3 March 2021), water shortage and drought conditions were the dominant themes in the calls recorded on Radio Ergo's independent feedback platform, especially coming from communities across the north. The problems caused by locusts across many regions also remained a top concern for callers. Many callers spoke of sick and dying livestock. There was an increase in the number of calls about Coronavirus, with callers acknowledging the second wave of the virus and asking questions about symptoms and prevention. The following summarises the calls by theme.

Water scarcity – the biggest number of calls came from Somaliland regions. A caller in Sahil said the whole area was rocked by drought and the livestock had diseases. Numerous callers from Togdher, Sanag and Sool locations complained of devastating effects of water shortage and drought, especially on the livestock. They reported that wells were dry or broken down. One caller said fresh water was expensive and the Somaliland government needed to provide water aid. In Waridad, Sanag, a caller said people had been displaced, and livestock were barely surviving. Many people asked for their messages to be shared with humanitarian and other responders. A caller in Qoryale, Togdher, said politicians had sent two water tankers but the water ran out quickly. Pastoralists expressed worry over the survival of their livestock and livelihoods. In Nugal, a female caller said she had lost her livestock and they had no water, and they could not use the Somali shilling. Callers in Mudug said the wells were dry. Further south, farmers in M. and L. Shabelle and Gedo regions said river water levels were low, there were no other water sources, and they were worried about their crops.

Locusts – locusts continued to cause great concern among callers from across the north, especially Awdal, Togdher, and Sanag; and also from Puntland, Galmudug, Shabelle regions, and Gedo. Many calls about locusts were combined with fears over water scarcity and livestock health. A female caller in Awdal said locusts were everywhere and she feared their livestock would die of starvation. In Jama-Qabar, Togdher, a caller said locusts had devoured his two-hectare farm. Numerous callers in Sanag described damage wreaked by locust plagues and the lack of fodder for their animals. Some callers were concerned about possible side-effects of using pesticides to control the locusts. A female caller in Higlale, Galgaduud, said they had lost their farms and the goats were dying. She asked for humanitarian aid. A caller in Wanlaweyn, L. Shabelle, said the locusts had returned there. A female caller in Tulo-Barwaaqo, Gedo, said locusts had destroyed their farms once before and they now feared the larvae would hatch to destroy their farm produce again.

COVID19 – there was almost double the number of calls on this topic this week compared to the previous week. Many were recognizing or acknowledging the return of the virus and asking questions to the Radio Doctor about symptoms or advice on keeping safe. Some callers described their symptoms and wanted diagnosis; some wanted to distinguish between Coronavirus and flu. A female caller in Sarmanyoo, Sool, asked how people in rural areas could protect themselves. She asked if items they bought in the towns could carry the virus. Another caller in Godalo, Sool, asked if animal fat could be used as a treatment. A female caller in Karkar, Bari, said the second wave was widespread there. Another female in Karkar urged people to wear masks and keep their distance. Other callers noted that the disease was widespread in their areas. A caller in M. Shabelle said Radio Ergo should continue its awareness raising as people lacked understanding about the virus.
