

Brief Summary

The callers to Radio Ergo's independent feedback platform this week (29 July – 3 August 2021) continued to be preoccupied by multiple challenges including water scarcity, prolonged drought, locust attacks, livestock stress, and general rising food insecurity. There were also reports of disease outbreaks from certain areas, and ongoing calls about COVID19. As awareness of the impact of climate change grows among audiences, there were more calls about environmental issues including deforestation and waste dumping. The following summarises the calls by theme.

Water crisis – calls about drought and water shortage came mostly from northern regions, with others from central and a few southern regions. In Togdher, there were calls from Buhodle, Sheikh, Qorilugud, and Hayira. The callers said the water shortage was affecting residents and livestock, which lacked fodder. They also complained about broken wells. A female caller in Hayira said they were facing water and food shortage and their livestock were dying. She wanted Radio Ergo to convey their message for help. Callers in various parts of Mudug and Galgadud wanted water aid. A female caller in Abudwak said the pastoralists had been neglected. A caller in Adado said prices there had escalated. In Hiran, a caller in Jalalaqsi said the river level was worryingly low; another said families and children were being affected by water shortage. In Middle Shabelle, a caller said Mahaday was ravaged by drought and water scarcity, and another in Rage-Ele said the livestock were sick. They both called for humanitarian aid.

Health – a caller in Erigabo, Sanag, reported a diarrhoea outbreak resulting from drinking dirty water. Callers in Adado and Baidoa reported measles outbreaks with some deaths of children.

Food security – several callers in Sanag and Galmudug reported food shortages and other urgent needs such as shelter. A mother of five in Abudwak said her family was desperate. In Adado, a pastoralist said their best goats were only selling for fifty dollars. Former farmers in Shilamadow said they were now displaced and needed aid. In Sanag, a caller said their names had been taken a year ago as locust-hit farmers but they had still not received any aid.

Locusts – calls about locust devastation came from parts of Somaliland, Puntland, and central Somalia, with a few from southern regions. Callers in Awdal, Togdher and Sanag said locusts were destroying farms and fodder and they needed control interventions. Callers in parts of Puntland said the swarms of locusts were laying larvae. Callers in Mudug were suffering locust invasions as well as water shortage. In Galgadud, a caller in Abudwak claimed the locusts had poisoned their vegetation and water. In Galmegag, farmers said the rainfall they needed for the crops had brought with it invasive locusts.

Environment/Climate – callers in Sanag, Qardo, Garowe, Jowhar and Kismayo were concerned about the environmental consequences of trees being cut down to make charcoal, and increasing dumping of waste products. They called for action by the authorities. (Radio Ergo is broadcasting an ongoing series on climate change, which has helped raise awareness around some of these issues.) There were also calls about the damaging effects of strong winds, especially in the Puntland village of Kulub, where houses were buried by sand and people needed assistance.

Livestock and wildlife – as well as calls about livestock disease, herders in different parts of the country reported invasive attacks on their livestock by wild animals including cheetahs, hyenas, foxes, and monkeys. Some said as killing wildlife was illegal they wanted to know how else to protect their domestic animals.

COVID19 – most callers on this topic had questions about symptoms for the Radio Doctor programme on Radio Ergo. One caller in Abudwak wanted to know how effective are the COVID19 vaccines that are now available. A caller from Al-Shabab controlled Buale in M. Shabelle wanted to know how to recognise the virus and how infected people can quarantine.
