

Brief Summary

Calls this week (1-7 September 2022) to Radio Ergo's independent, national, toll-free audience feedback platform raised continuing concerns over rising prices and shortages of basic commodities such as food and water, losses of livestock and farm produce due to the harsh drought, and displacement of families without any access to aid. Farmers were worried by lack of water and plagues of pests. Water sources running dry or being inaccessible was a common complaint among callers from pastoralist areas. Conflict in Galgadud, Bay, and Hiran was noted as an additional stress on communities, whilst several callers in Somaliland spoke of rape and protection concerns. The following summarises the calls by theme.

Protection – a caller in Buhodle, Togdher, said there was insecurity in their area and cases of rape of young girls. Another caller in Garadag, Sanag, complained of cases of rape and violence against women. Both wanted action from the government. A caller in Murufle said his 6-year-old daughter had gone missing whilst looking after the family's goats.

Conflict - Callers in Galgadud said conflict with Al-Shabab had started up again and was exacerbating the conditions caused by the drought. They asked for help and for the authorities to take action. A caller displaced from Dayib in Galgadud said he had lost all his property including his clothes. A caller in Baidoa said they were suffering from prolonged drought and conflict. A caller in Beletweyne said deaths and displacement had resulted from the insecurity that troubled the region.

Prices – A caller in Buhodle, Togdher, said rising prices had affected their standard of living and the government should stabilise prices. A caller in Badhan, Sanag, said a cup of tea cost $0.3 and a bottle of water $0.5, and the government must intervene. An IDP caller in a camp in Abudwak said prices were very high and there was also corruption around aid. Callers in Bosaso said basic vegetables such as tomatoes had become very expensive and there was also high unemployment. A female caller in Kismayo said they were worried about food prices especially the cost of flour.

Drought and water crisis – In the north, among Togdher callers one in Balli-dool said the drought was worsening with strong winds currently and they had no aid. Callers in Buhodle said their livestock had died, drought was worsening, and they needed food and water. In Sanag, callers in El-Afweyn said many suffered from malnutrition, and they had no basic services such as water and healthcare. In Sool, callers said the drought had destroyed livestock fodder and farm produce, and water boreholes were not functioning. In various parts of Somaliland, callers said they were destitute after losing their livestock including camels. Others spoke of an influx of displaced people, lack of water and aid, and high prices. In Puntland, callers in Karkar, Bari, and Garowe said the drought was worsening, livestock had died, and they needed fodder for animals and food aid. Callers in Galkayo, Bandiradley, and Goldogob in Mudug complained of water shortage. Several callers across parts of Galgadud spoke of severe water shortage. One in Hananbure said they were heading towards famine. Among callers in Hiran all describing worsening conditions, a female caller in Mahas said most of their goats had died and the remaining ones were starving as the land was bare. Among callers in Bay region, one in Baidoa said all his 600 goats had died in the drought and they needed help. Others said there were many displaced.

Environment – several callers in Somaliland, Mudug, and Gedo were concerned by the continuing cutting of trees for charcoal production which they saw as exacerbating drought conditions.

Agriculture – Farmers in various regions calling for advice from the Radio Farming programme were concerned by lack of water and destructive crop pests.
